Note the level of audio and see how much your audio level is being affected by the face shots. If the audio level is high, Camtasia Studio will cut the audio level when you record. That means, your audio will be clipped (cut off) and the best thing you can do to avoid this is to be aware that your audio level will be clipped, and record the audio yourself. It is best to record the audio during quiet periods when there are not other audio sources playing, and if you are recording in a noisy environment, I recommend using a stand alone recorder for your microphone. 9. Learn Quick Tips for YouTube. If you are planning on making a video for YouTube, you should know how to use the different features of the YouTube site. I've found that one of the best ways to learn how to use the YouTube site is to go to YouTube and record a video (using the screen capture tool) of one of the YouTube tips and then watch it. The YouTube help pages are very user friendly, and you can easily learn how to use the different features by watching how other people use them. In fact, I've often learned how to do things by watching videos on YouTube. 10. Use Your Caring..... Your audience doesn't want to know about the background of the people you're sharing your video with. And, you don't have to. Just let your story speak for itself. However, I have found that if I spend more time caring for the people I'm sharing my video with (by talking to them, sending them encouraging emails, and other social networking means), then they tend to feel more comfortable and are more willing to forgive me for my mistakes. So, think about the people you plan to share your video with. Do you know them, or are they just people you are friends with on Facebook? Are they people you know personally or are they just people you follow on Facebook or Twitter? Don't just plan to talk about your passion, sell your product, or educate your audience, but also care for them first. You'll be more successful and they'll be more interested in what you have to say.
